2. Continue to grow the collection of alumni data. Data from recent and past graduates can provide insight into the value of former students' education, their gained skills, and their satisfaction of learning in their field of study and with UNE support services.

The collection of robust assessment data from and about movement towards our collective goal of creating and maintaining programs of excellence across the University.

5. Facilitate communication and coordination of program assessment measures across the University, specifically in regard to the use of student surveys. Administering too many surveys

3. Add to the UAC web page assessment resources that include the steps in the assessment process, tips on writing SLOs, and examples of curriculum maps and direct and indirect measures.

In summary, the culture of assessment is vibrant at UNE with 100% participation from academic programs and a growing number of administrative units. I commend the UAC's work this year culminating in their annual report and presentation to the senior leadership. I also shared the UAC report with President Herbert and thought it important to share with you his response:

I knew that we had made tremendous progress in assessment of student learning, but I hadn't yet
